Man to suffer for weird sexual preferences

A man who quenched his sexual appetite with his neighbour's goat will languish for seven years in jail.

The 20-year-old was convicted on his own plea of guilty by an Iten court for the offence committed on November 15, in Tot Division, Marakwet East District.

Iten Senior Resident Magistrate Beatrice Mosiria handed Timothy Kilimo Kiptoo the jail term.

Prosecution led by Tom Chitira told the court that on that day, the owner of the goat had locked his flock in a pen, about 100 meters from his residential house and went to sleep.

But at night, he heard some commotion and a goat bleat. He armed himself with a torch and rushed to the pen.

He found his goat tightly tied with a rope and Kiptoo, his neighbour mounting it as his trousers and underpants lay on the floor.

The neighbour raised the alarm attracting other neighbours.

A section of villagers was refrained from lynching the man. The suspect was frogmarched to Tot Police Station.

Tests by veterinary officials indicated Kiptoo had had carnal knowledge of the goat. The accused was also examined and later given some counselling.
