Turf wars between the Attorney-General and the Justice minister are slowing down the pace of reforms, a group of MPs charged yesterday.

Some of them blamed the wrangling on the minister, Mr Mutula Kilonzo, whom they accused of encroaching on AG Amos Wako's responsibilities.

The rows come amid fears that two crucial commissions on the implementation of the Constitution may not be set up on time due to the differences.

The latest clash between Mr Kilonzo and Mr Wako was over the list of 80 new constituencies proposed by the Interim Independent Boundaries Review Commission headed by Mr Andrew Ligale.

While Mr Wako advised that the list be gazetted, Mr Kilonzo dismissed it saying the Ligale team should hand
